DUTCH BREEDER TULIPS

In the seventeenth century the old Dutch mother Tulips, now known as Breeder Tulips, were grown only for the purpose of producing variegated varieties. With the change of fashion, these "breeder" Tulips have been resurrected from the private gardens of Dutch bulb growers where they had been treasured for their deep tones and artistic blending of shade, as well as for their breeding possibilities. The flowers are large and borne on tall strong stems. They are especially fine mixed with Darwins and other classes.

INDIAN CHIEF. Indian-brown. Enormous size. Flower on tall, stiff stems.

FANTASY. Warm pink with inner color of deep velvety rose. Apple-green on back of petals.
